Q: what is the right way to get information from router (for example, IP addresses) I have a simple configuration in my router to:

allow all to IP address: 192.168.1.1

allow all to IP address: 192.168.1.2

allow all to IP address: 192.168.1.3

I will forward all IP address from 192.168.1.1 to a server, or from 192.168.1.2 to a server, or from 192.168.1.3 to a server. For example, 192.168.1.1 ->

192.168.1.2 -> 192.168.1.3 ->
192.168.1.1 -> 192.168.1.1
192.168.1.1 -> 192.168.1.2 ->
192.168.1.3 -> 192.168.1.1 ->
192.168.1.1 192.168.1.1 ->
192.168.1.2 -> 192.168.1.3 ->
192.168.1.1 -> 192.168.1.1 Now,
I want to get from a server how many IP addresses that has been forwarded from 192.168.1.1 or from 192.168.1.2 or from 192.168.1.3 to other servers.
Could you give me the right way to do it in the problem I explained? A: You need to understand basics of networking. In your case it's simple ping. Just ping the IP you want to check and it will return you all IPs to which it was routed. You will also get reply in that case. To get all IPs that were forwarded just grep them from the output of ping. #

ping 192.168.1.1 PING 192.168.1.1 (192.168.1.1) 56(84)
bytes of data. Reply from 192.168.1.1: bytes=84

192.168.1.1: bytes=84
